

Division of Architecture Publication Incentive Program

One of the central aims of the Gibbs College of Architecture's Strategic Plan is to increase faculty research. To this end, the Division of Architecture is launching a pilot-program to incentivize an increase in peer-reviewed publications. All full-time Division of Architecture faculty are eligible for this award. Funds may be taken as a salary stipend or used for research expenditures.

Faculty publication awards will be as follows:

- $500 per peer-reviewed journal article or book chapter in which the faculty is first author;
- $750 per peer-reviewed journal article for which the faculty is first author in the following journals: The Journal of Architectural Education (JAE) and Technology, Architecture + Design (TAD).
- $200 per peer-reviewed journal article or book chapter in which the faculty is second or third author or corresponding author;
- $500 for editing or co-editing an edited journal issue, edited book or monograph;
- $1,000 for a single-authored monograph;
- $1,000 for Architect Magazine R&D awards;
- $500 for awards from the AIA or ACSA;
- $500 for winning or placing in design competitions;
- $500 for being the faculty sponsor of a student competition in which our students win AIA, ACSA, ULI or similar awards. $250 for placing in such competitions.

Eligibility and Award Process

Due to the recent increase in predatory journals, faculty should have the journal or press with which they seek to publish approved by the Director and Associate Directors in order to be eligible for these awards. Moreover, faculty must submit reviewer comments to the Director as evidence of peer review. To be eligible, a journal must be indexed in a library database such as JSTOR or the Avery Index. Conference proceedings and self-published books are not eligible for these awards. Faculty are strongly encouraged, however, to revise existing conference papers and publish them as peer-reviewed journal articles. Design competitions must also be approved by the Director and Associate Director.

Division of Architecture Foundation funds will be used for these awards until they are exhausted. Awards will be paid only after publication is complete not on the basis of acceptance alone.
